

Barry Chaloner, M.Ed.

has frequently presented at state and national conferences, is a researcher, trainer, therapist, and consultant to 0-3, preschool, elementary, Head Start, and clinical programs on early intervention, early mental health, bullying prevention, character development, and play and attachment-based therapies. Mr. Chaloner is a certified Theraplay Level-I Practitioner and licensed as a professional clinical counselor and school psychologist with over 30-years experience. He has a private practice specializing in marriage, family, and child therapy and is the 0-5 mental health consultant to Southern Ute Head Start, an adjunct faculty at Adams State College in early intervention and play therapy, and the founding director of the Center for Early Intervention. He is the creator of the PALS Early Intervention Model and author of multiple publications on PALS, early intervention, early mental health, and play therapy. One of his most recent publications is a chapter on his model in Dr. Charles Schaefer's book, "School-Based Play Therapy" published by John Wiley and Sons. Mr. Chaloner is well known for his fun and effective brain-based approach to training and therapy.
